The aim of the study was evaluation of the efficacy of the treatment of high-risk patients with white coat hypertension (WCH) and isolated systolic hypertension (ISH) by ambulatory blood pressure monitoring (ABPM). The examination was carried out on the basis of an original test design in 79 randomly selected patients with uncomplicated arterial hypertension (AH) of stage I-III: 41 WCH and 38 ISH. The duration of observation was 3 months. The treatment plan included nicotinamide, 24 mg/day; hydralazine, 25 mg/day; enalapril, 5 mg/day. The efficacy of the treatment was assessed by ABPM with the use of mean value over 24 hours. Relapse of AH was considered in case of the disease onset recurrence or increase of the blood pressure over the initially determined hypertensive level. The efficacy of the test treatment was high: 95% of patients exhibited marked regression of AH, 85% of patients required additional antihypertensive therapy as a result of the treatment failure, 16% patients showed relapse of the disease.
